INTRODUCTION

In Afghanistan, in spite of an excellent instruction in Dari by our very able teacher, Mr. S. Sakaria, we still have felt many times the need of a pocket dictionary limited to a vocabulary necessary for the every-day's talk.

Serious students, we know, prefer phonetic symbols for exactitude of pronunciation. However, for ordinary people with little time for study are confusing and discouraging. Nor need we apologize for using simpler means. Many maps and books make use of romanization.

Therefore, being so acutely aware of the need here for something, and something immediately useful, we have taken Joan Underwood's small English- Korean Dictionary as model, and have inveigled Mr Sakaria into helping us fit the proper Afghan Dari words to the selected vocabulary. Later, as my time ran short, Mr Maurice Dingwall was drafted to help in this time-consuming business, and to him we owe our deepest gratitude for the many long hours he has contributed to this project. We are grateful also to Dr. J. Christy Wilson for his encouragement, kind assistance, and suggestions; and to Mr. William Kane for his invaluable liaison work in the mechanics of production.

Meantime we dedicate this little pocket word-book to you, whoever you are, who want to speak quickly, directly, and easily to your Afghan friends and acquaintances

Lurabelle D. Annis.

I want to thank Dr. Jorn C. Fitter, member of the german economic team at the University of Kabul, for having revised the english part of this dictionary.

S. Sakaria.

Pronunciation

Vowels:

a	as in f*a*ther
e	as in *e*very
i	as in *i*ll
o	as in *o*rbit
u	as the double oo in b*oo*t
aa	as in market or in garden
ai	as in *Ai*da, *Ai*nu, or as the long i in *i*ce
au	as the ou in our
dj	as in pleasure

Consonant:

Most consonants are pronounced as they are in western tongues. A few, however, should be noted:

g is always hard, as in good q is not followed by u, as in English; it is a somewhat more explosive, breathy sound, much as the kh in *kh*an (prince) and khaki, two Persian words long ago assimilated by English.

kh is a quite throaty, caughing sound, much as the ch in the Scottish lo*ch*, or the Germani ch.

BRIEF NOTES ON GRAMMER

(c) ketabton.com: The Digital Library

BRIEF NOTES ON GRAMMAR

Articles:

A, An, and the (singular) are all expressed by yak (one) whenever it is deemed necessary. Generally, however, the article is used only when particular emphasis is placed on the subject.

Nouns:

1. Plurals are formed by adding ha:

   dars (lesson) dərshaa (lesson) NOTE: Pronounced "daras-haa".
   tefel (child) tefelhaa (children)

2. A word is attached to its modifier by adding-e:
   dars-e mushkel (difficult lesson)
   tfeel-e khub (good child).

3. Objective (accusative case is indicated by ra:
   Tefel khub ast (The child is good)
   Tefel raa mebinam (I see the child)
   Tefelhaa raa mebinam (I see the children).

4. Prepositions perform most other needed functions:
   ba (to, at, into, on) baa (with, by means of) dar (in) az (from) etc.

VERBS

Since verb forms are based upon either the infinitive or the present person singular, these two forms are given in the

(c) ketabton.com: The Digital Library

dictionary preceeding:

Find (v) raaftan, meyaafam (to find, I find)

See (v) didan, mebinam (to see, I see)

Exceptions are the compound verb forms (for the present tense of these, see the basic verb (kardan, mekonam:-zadan, mezanam° etc.):

Clean (adj) paak

(v) paak kardan ("to make clean")

Say, Speak (v) gap zadan ("to hit words")

For the beginner anxious to talk right away, only three, forms of th verb are absolutely essential: the past, the present and the imperative.

Past tense is formed by dropping the -an ending from the infinitive and adding the personal endings.

budan	(to be)	(man) budam	(I was)
		(tu) oudi	thou were)
	etc.
raftam	(to go)	(man) raftam	(I went)
		(tu) rafti	(thou went)
	etc.

Present tense is usually indicated by the prefix me- but the forms are often so different from the infinitive that the present tense should be learned right along with the infinitive from the very beginning.

budan	(to be)	(man) hastam	(I am)
		(tu) hasti	(thou art)
	etc...
raftan	(to go)	(man) merawam	I (go)
		(tu) merawi	(thou goest)
	etc.

(c) ketabton.com: The Digital Library

Imperative is usually indicated by the prefix be-. Three forms are used: the first is extremely short used to inferiors or animals, often in anger; the second, more generally usedo is polite; the third is like the second, except that lotfan (please) makes it the ultimate in politeness.

raftan (to go)	Berau! (boro)	(go away!)
	berawed	(go)
	lotfan berawed	(Please go).
aamadan (to come)	be'aa!	(Come!)
	be'aa'ed!	(Come).
	lotfan be'aa'ed	(Please come).
Pak kardan (to clean)	paak kon!	(Clean (it)!)
	paak koned	(Clean (it)!)
	lotfan paak koned	(Please clean (it)

Future tense can be indicated by using the present with such future words or phrases as fardaa (tomorrow), hafta-e baad (next week), dar aayenda (in future):

farda man khana ra paak mekonam. (Tomorrow I will) clean the house).

Dar aayenda o mefahmad. In the future he (will) understand).

budan (to be), daashtan (to have),

Notes:—daashtan is especially to be noted because it does not use ra with its objects: ketaab daaram (I have a book), O baks nadaasht (he did not have a box), etc.

budan (to be) in the past tense is used as an auxiliary with other verbs to form the past perfect tense. (Man buda budam.

khastan (to want, to wish) in one form is used as an auxiliary with other verbs to form the future tense. (man kham bud, "I shall be".

shodan (to become) is used in the past tense as an auxiliary with other verbs to indicate passive voice, (daada shodan, "to be given)".

(For a complete table showing all the varicus tenses, see Appendix) I.

ADJECTIVE

Comparison is accomplished much as in English:

khub (good), khubtar (better), khubtarin (best) or khub (good), betar (better), betarin (best) kalaan (big), kalaantar (bigger), kalaantarin (biggest), etc.,

Sentence Structure.

In Dari the sentence order is SUBJECT - OBJECT - VERB.

Aan tefel khub ast	That child good is.
iin tefel khubtar ast.	This child better is.
o baks ra mekhaahad.	He (she) the box wants.
Maa ketabhaa daarem.	We the books have. (Note here, that daashtan does not use ra with its object. See daashtan Note, page 5).
khana-e maa az erfaarat dur ast.	House of us (our house) from the embassy far is.

Questions.

Aya often introduces a question, much as the upside-down question mark used by Spanish-speaking people at the beginning of an interrogation. However, aya is not absolutely necessary and is often omitted. Questions also are introduced by interrogative words.

Aya, shomaa ketaab daared?	(Do you have a book?
ketaab e khub daared?	(Doyou have a good book)?

(c) ketabton.com: The Digital Library

Ayaa, Habib iin ketaab ra mekhaahad? (Does Habib want his book)?

Che mekhaahed? (What do you want)?

Chand daana ketaab daar and? —(How many (piece) book (s) do they have)?

(Note usage: daana (piece) usually follows (chand) (how many).

Yes and No. Negatives.

bale (yes) often introduces a positive answer.

Ne, na-, and n' denote negation.

bale, man ketaab daram.	(Yes, I have a (or any) book).
Ne, ketaab nadaaram.	(No, I don't have a (or any) book).
bale, Habib iin ketaab raa mekhaahad.	(Yes, Habib wants this book).
ne, Habib iin ketab raa namekhaahad.	(No, Habib doesn't want this book).

GREETINGS AND USEFUL EXPRESSIONS

salaam! salaam alaikom!	Peace! Peace to thee! (Compare the Hebrew ahalom, peace).
Shomaa khub hasted?	Are you well?
Khub hasti?	Art thou well? (Intimate form)
shomaa chetaur hasted?	How are you?
